

We are using the branded packaged food dataset.

Using elementary data analysis methods we will answer several questions. Firstly, we will determine what some of the most common ingredients are in each food category. A large part of the work will be refining the provided data into a more usable dataset. We are using MATLAB to sequentially extract the pertinent information into more manageable formats. We will also determine some of the more common combinations of ingredients in food products.